

I am against any proposal that would lessen Indiana's telephone privacy law protection. Our time at home has been a real joy--not having dozens of telemarketer calls a night. It was getting to the point that we were actually afraid of answering the phone because of the telemarketers calling. They are so rude--you tell them you are not interested and they just keep badgering, so we just hang up on them. In the meantime we just get upset. There was one instance where a telemarketer called 5 times--in a row! My husband told the guy we weren't interested and hung up, and boom! He called again. Finally he told him we were going to report him to the police and he hung up on us! Needless to say, we contacted the company that he worked for. So please, leave things the way they are. It has really been nice!